DESCRIPTION

Pendant lamp for diffused lighting; Tonda is a luminous sculpture that is never precisely equal: the diffuser in opaline blown glass is crafted by hand, with transparent shading (shifting from white towards the top to transparent below). It is up to the master glass-blower to capture the exact combination and fusion of white and transparent to achieve the shaded effect. Each lamp is therefore unique, and the shade between the two colours of the glass varies slightly from one lamp to another, thereby lending the product a craft-based quality. The glass rests freely on the metal support, which is out of alignment, and is composed of a steel rod, brushed and polished by hand before receiving a powdercoated finish. The steel ceiling cable is attached to the end of the support rod. Cap in white ABS, metal ceiling plate and transparent power cable.

FERRUCCIO LAVIANI

An architect and designer, Ferruccio Laviani works with companies in both the furniture and the fashion industry, for whom beyond designing products, he also takes care of corporate identity and designs show-rooms across the world.

He is also in charge of artistic direction, communication, setting up exhibitions and events, always with a highly contemporary and recognisable style. He made his début in the world of lighting by designing the Orbital sculpture-lamp for Foscarini, an authentic icon of Italian design, together with his wall lamp version, Bit. The term sculpture-lamp can also be used to describe Supernova, a three-dimensional volume created with two-dimensional surfaces, Dolmen, a piece with a strong symbolic value, and Tuareg, a technological installation inspired by nature.
